TOO SUCCESSFUL.

A German inventor, in order to advertise an automobile horn which he had just invented, sent one to the kaiser. The latter was so pleased with it that he gave orders that no one in Berlin, except members of the royal family, should be allowed to use it. The inventor appealed from this order to the federal council, but this body upheld the kaiser. We can't think of anyone on whom the liquid refreshments could more legitimately be assessed than this inventor.—Sydney Herald.
